

For most, the answer is “a bit of both.” Both plans are registered and provide a way to save for your retirement and other future lifestyle expenses. Current income levels play a large role in answering the question and both plans allow for your savings to remain tax sheltered while inside the plan. It’s also a good idea to ask yourself if you have a known short or medium-term need (under five years), or long term retirement needs.

For more details review the key differences and pros and cons of each below:

What are the pros & cons?

Registered Retirement Savings Plan (RRSP)

PROS	CONS
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Immediate tax benefit on contribution</li> <li>Funds can be deposited into a Spousal RRSP to help split income and thereby lower taxes in retirement</li> <li>Enforces savings discipline because of the tax implications on withdrawals</li> <li>At death, RRSPs can be transferred to the surviving spouse tax free</li> </ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>The investor will have to pay tax upon withdrawal, and a minimum, 10% withholding at source is required with a maximum 30% for larger amounts</li> <li>Withdrawals are subject to your marginal tax bracket at any time (other than for a first-time home buyer plan or you or your spouse are attending school)</li> <li>Withdrawals result in permanent loss of contribution room</li> <li>Unless there is a surviving spouse or dependant minor child, the entire balance of an RRSP, valued on the date of death, is taxed as income on the deceased's terminal return. If the balance is large enough, it can generate significant tax liability for the heirs</li> </ul>

Tax Free Savings Account (TFSA)

PROS	CONS
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Funds can be withdrawn from a TFSA at any time without any tax penalties</li> <li>TFSA spans a lifetime, does not present any tax liability at death unlike an RRSP</li> </ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Funds can be withdrawn from a TFSA at any time making withdrawals tempting; investors must rely on self-discipline</li> <li>Repayments of withdrawals that put an individual over the maximum contribution are subject to severe penalties; investors must self-monitor, and wait until the following year</li> </ul>
